FREE PRINTABLE

Recipe Request Kit

This is a free sample from the Mothleaf Family Recipe Binder: the two pages that do the most work when you are trying to collect recipes from other people before they are lost.

Page 2, recipe request slips. Print, cut along the dashed line and hand or post one to each relative or friend whose cooking you want to keep. Tuck in a stamped, addressed envelope if they live far away; replies come back faster.

Page 3, a recipe with a story. For the dishes that come with a person attached. Sit down with the cook and fill it in together, or ask them to write it in their own hand.

Good questions to ask while you write. Who taught you this? What do you do that the written recipe leaves out? How do you know when it is done? What would you never swap?

What the full binder adds

> 26 pages in US Letter and A4: recipe index, section pages, three recipe page styles, 4 × 6 in recipe cards, a recipes-to-try list, a week of meals, a pantry list, a gathering planner, and a kitchen reference (measures, oven temperatures, substitutions). It is at mothleaf.com/product/family-recipe-binder.

Printing: choose “Actual size” or 100% scale. This file is set for US Letter (8.5 × 11 in). Free for personal use: print as many copies as you like for your own family. Please share the link rather than the file.

Give or post these to relatives and friends, then file the replies in the binder. Cut along the dashed line.

Will you share a recipe?

I am collecting the family's recipes in one binder, so they are not lost and can be passed on. Would you write one of yours here, the way you actually make it, and add a line about where it comes from?

A recipe with a story

For the dishes that come with a person attached. Ask the cook to write it in their own hand if you can: the handwriting is half of what makes it worth keeping.
